

EUROPEAN PEACE TO BE DECIDED AT ROME-LONDON TALKS

If Agreement Fails Predictions Are That Britain Will Prepare for War

FRANCE IS CRITICAL

France Now Has Only Russia And Czechoslovakia As Her Allies

Over the green baize tables in Rome and London, where negotiations for an Anglo-Italian understanding will shortly begin, the fate of European peace will likely be decided, observers believed today.

Developments in the international situation:

London—Backed by a strong parliamentary vote of confidence, Premier Chamberlain set plans for the Rome-London talks. If agreement fails, predictions were that Britain will begin active preparations for war with Italy.

Paris—With only Red Russia and weak Czechoslovakia as her allies, France was regarded by many as facing the most perilous situation since 1914. She is spending two billion dollars for arms this year.

Moscow—Defense Commissar Voroshilov urged rapid construction of a Soviet navy capable of standing up to all opposition.

Warsaw—Field Marshal Goering, German Air Minister, arrived here to talk with Foreign Minister Beck regarding the latter's forthcoming visit to Rome.

Tokyo—In their first invasion of the Japanese empire, Chinese air-raiders today inflicted numerous casualties on cities in Formosa.

Hendaye, France—The Spanish loyalist reportedly suffered 60,000 casualties when the insurgents took Terner.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—(INS)—Sustained by a 330-168 vote of support in the House of Commons, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain went ahead today with his plans to make "peace" with Premier Mussolini.

Chamberlain obtained parliamentary approval of his foreign policy when the house overwhelmingly defeated a Laborite motion of censure for the government's plan to make a deal with Il Duce—a program which caused Anthony Eden to resign as foreign secretary.

The defeated censure motion stated the house had no confidence in the government's conduct of foreign affairs. Had the Commons supported the motion, the Chamberlain ministry would have been forced to resign.

But rejection of the motion means that the government now has the complete confidence and support of a majority of members of Parliament and that Chamberlain can move forward unhampered with his program of talks with Italy aimed at an Anglo-Italian and then general European appeasement.

President Roosevelt Returns To Washington

By George Durno
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
HYDE PARK, N. Y., Feb. 23.—(INS)—America's position in foreign affairs approached clarification today as President Roosevelt packed his bags to return to Washington and Joseph P. Kennedy, newly-appointed ambassador to London, sailed to take over his important diplomatic post.

The President was leaving his family home in mid-afternoon to reach Washington late this evening. It was assumed one of his first appointments would be with Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

Kennedy meanwhile was embarking from New York after a full-day conference here with Mr. Roosevelt.

Obviously, the new envoy to the Court of St. James received final instructions during his Tuesday session with the President. What those instructions were remained a closely guarded secret between the executive and Kennedy.

Neither would comment on the British Cabinet split over Anglo-Italian relations or Chancellor Hitler's declaration of Nazi determination to expand.

Tomorrow, it was expected the President would see several of his closest international advisers. On Friday, the cabinet meets. Also on Friday, Mr. Roosevelt again holds a press conference, where he may air his views on critical developments abroad.

HERE AND THERE IN BUCKS COUNTY

At a meeting of the Newtown New Century Club, the Public Health Committee presented a health program representing district, county and local angles.

Miss Sara J. Packer, chairman of the committee, introduced the speakers, Miss Virginia Elliman, director of public health nursing in southeastern district of the Red Cross; Mrs. John Chambers, Newtown, president of the Bucks County Public Health Association, and Dr. Charles T. Hunter, Newtown.

Miss Elliman explained the Red Cross Nursing Service objective is a peace-time health program including home hygiene and care of the sick. Over 2,000 units of nursing service have been given by the Red Cross, 14 of these being in Bucks. Montgomery, Chester, Delaware and Philadelphia counties.

Mrs. Chambers said that the health work in Bucks County should be better organized with private and official agencies working hand in hand.

Dr. Hunter was especially concerned with local conditions and deplored the lack of a community nurse. He also hit housing conditions.

Clarence Rumpf, from the high school music department, rendered two piano solos after which tea was served in the west room in charge of Mrs. Harry VanHorn. Over 50 guests were present.

A large number of members from the various granges of Upper Bucks county were in attendance at the quarterly meeting of Upper Bucks Pomona Grange, No. 50, held in the grange hall, Plumsteadville, yesterday morning and afternoon.

The main feature of the day's proceedings was the installation of officers for the coming term of two years. This was done in a very impressive manner by Isaac S. Gross, of Plumsteadville, overseer of the Pennsylvania State Grange, who was assisted by the Misses Catherine Gross, Florence Feller and Dorothy Wolfinger with Miss Elizabeth Ott as pianist. During the ceremony Howard W. Detwiler, Chalfont Grange, was installed master of Pomona, while the other officers were filled as follows: Overseer, Hobart Myers, Plumsteadville Grange; lecturer, Mrs. Hattie Steele, Plumsteadville Grange; steward, Henry Cawley, Franklin Grange; assistant steward, Charles Try, Chalfont Grange; chaplain, Rev. William Rupp, Great Swamp Grange; treasurer, Jacob M. Landis, Richland Grange; secretary, Miss Clara Johnson, Keller's Church Grange; gate keeper, Chester Martin, Chalfont Grange; Pomona, Mrs. Mary Rau, Franklin Grange; Flora, Miss Viola Koder, Keller's Church Grange; lady assistant steward, Mrs. Charles Try, Chalfont Grange, and executive committee, William H. Weaver, Franklin Grange.

Miss Lillian Landis, Richland Grange, who was elected Ceres, was unable to be present, but will be installed later.

The second annual graduation exercises of the Bucks County Police Academy will be held in the American HARRISBURG, Feb. 23.—(INS)—Pennsylvania's plain-living Amish and Mennonites are strong advocates of peace.

There would be no armed conflicts if they had their way. They refuse to fight for or against others. With world affairs as they are at present, some point to the sects as an outstanding example for a troubled world to consider.

It is a rare occasion when a member of the sects becomes involved in a law suit or is haled into court for violation of the law. They follow the "Mind-your-own-business" theory with few exceptions. Seldom do they mingle with the outside world, except on business. Nor are they "dumb Dutch," as some persons refer to them.

Most are able to read in German and English and have their own very definite ideas. Perhaps, though, they do not air them as often as most persons. They do not mix in politics.

They have a natural tendency to take a serious slant on life. Little of their time is devoted to social events. Christmas and Easter are their main Deputy District Commander Caleb Cope introduced District Commander, and Mrs. Leon Wait, Royersford; Deputy Commander and Mrs. Paul Sines, of Perkasie; Commander Johnson Miller and Adjutant Alex Neely, of Yardley.

The program opened with singing by a group from the Junior auxiliary, under direction of Mrs. Walter Barber; feats of magic by Bennett Strait, of Fallsington; selections by a girls' trio, composed of Joyce Pope, Shirley Heenan and Mary McTamney, with Miss Catherine Moyer as accompanist, and cornet solos by Robert Jennings.

Mrs. Paul Sines, eastern vice-president of the American Legion Auxiliary of the Department of Pennsylvania, the principal speaker, spoke on the various kinds of service the American Legion and auxiliary are performing. She urged adequate national defense.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

End of The Filibuster

Washington, Feb. 22. WITH the sidetracking of the so-called Anti-Lynching bill, which, to the exclusion of all other business, has absorbed the attention of the Senate since January 3, ended—temporarily, at least—as extraordinary a piece of politics as the country has seen in many years.

WITHOUT in the least reflecting upon the sincerity of Senator Robert Wagner, whose name is attached to the bill, the fact remains that its White House support was given to enable the national Democratic organization to pay its debt to the Negroes in eleven Northern and border-line States who helped them win the Presidential election of 1936. No denial of that statement has been made. None could be. The facts are much too obvious.

AS A RESULT of the Roosevelt policy of aid and jobs for the unemployed, of which Negroes in the Northern cities have been the chief beneficiaries, coupled with an expensive, intensive and carefully calculated Negro coddling campaign in which Federal patronage and White House cultivation were used to an unprecedented extent, the great bulk of the big Negro vote in these pivotal States was transferred from the Republican party, where it had been a basic asset, to the New Deal party, which it enabled to carry a considerable number of States, including Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois and others. Without that transfer of the Negro voters, each one of which counted two, there would have been no such "mandate" from

TO TEST STUDENTS IN HIGH SCHOOL FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Parents Are Requested to Give Consent in Writing for the Test

WILL BEGIN ON MONDAY

State Health Department Issues Bulletin Giving Facts About the Disease

A determined fight against tuberculosis is to be launched in the Bristol high school beginning Monday. Free examination of high school students is to be offered to those desiring it. Permission of parents must first be obtained, however, and this permission must be in writing.

Students have been furnished with slips on which it is stated: "Tuberculosis of the lungs very often begins at about the age when children enter the high school. In most cases there are no symptoms of this early tuberculosis. It can be discovered by using a skin test somewhat like the Schick test and by taking X-ray pictures of the lungs. Tuberculosis is curable and especially so if it is detected before much damage is done."

The student's name is then written in a space provided therefor and the signature of the parent or guardian is given, along with the name of the family physician.

Parents are requested to return consent to the high school by Thursday. The results of all tests will be confidential and made known only to the parents and the family physician. The test has the approval of the Bucks County Medical Society.

In a bulletin issued by the Pennsylvania Department of Health, the following is given:

"In this state tuberculosis was for many years the principal cause of death among our people. Today it has fallen to sixth place. Unfortunately, however, it still occupies first place when we consider the cause of death of our young adults. Tuberculosis is one of the commonest of all diseases. There are many people who have had it and gotten over it without ever knowing they had it. It can be prevented and it can be cured."

"It is possible to show by a skin test, done just the way the Schick test is done but with different material, whether or not a person has been infected with tuberculosis. If he has, the skin becomes red at the point where the tuberculin was injected. This is called a positive reaction. But the positive reaction does not tell whether the infection is an old one which has become cured or an active one still present. After the test has been made, therefore, and found to be positive it remains to be shown whether the reaction is due to an old and healed infection or whether active trouble is present. This is done by taking X-ray pictures of the chest. The X-ray will show whether there is any active tuberculosis."

"By tuberculin testing and the X-ray tuberculosis can be detected at a very early stage—weeks or months before the disease could be found out by the usual method of chest examinations. Cure of these early cases is much more certain than when the disease has been allowed to advance so far as to have seriously damaged the lung tissue."

"Young children are very susceptible to tuberculosis but in many instances the disease does not make serious progress for a number of years. It is in older boys and girlhood that these sleeping infections often wake up and sometimes progress rapidly. It is for this reason that students in the first year of high school have been particularly selected as the group which needs this testing for tuberculosis and the State Health Department now offers to them, without any cost, an opportunity to find out whether there are signs of beginning trouble in the lungs which should be looked after immediately. That a child is plump and appears to be healthy is not by any means a sign that he does not have beginning tuberculosis."

"There is attached to this circular what we call a consent slip. It is hoped that every parent will be sufficiently interested in the welfare of his child to sign and return it to the school with him."

WAR IS MUSIC

The Japanese war obsession has colored all the life of that nation, even its art and music. The country's best known composer, Keizo Horiuchi, now seeks his inspiration in the sounds of battle. He has returned to Tokyo from Shanghai, where he went to gather phonetic data for a symphony. He hopes to translate into music the roar of the siege gun, the scream of the heavy shell, the murderous spatter of shrapnel, the soprano of rifles and machine guns, contralto of trench mortars, baritone of anti-aircraft rifles and the bass of heavy cannon, intermingled with whatever sound it is that a bayonet charge makes.

Horiuchi thinks all these must be splendid material for a symphony and he says he hopes to create a piece of music comparable to Beethoven's musical description of the Napoleonic wars. He should have no trouble doing that. Apparently Horiuchi is not familiar enough with Western music to know that the description of the Napoleonic wars is the one phase of his work of which Beethoven never was proud, and that his compositions of this group are looked upon by virtually all critics and musicians as having been conceived on a vulgar plan and as showing few traces of the genius of the greatest of all composers of symphonic music.

The history of music is against Horiuchi. Wars have inspired little of the great and enduring music of the world, and that little is sad and tragic. Except for parts of the Third, the Eroica, the Beethoven symphonies derive no inspiration from wars; his Sixth, which is the Pastoral, and his Seventh, which is a gay dance symphony are known and loved by thousands who have never heard of his Battle of Vittoria.

EVOLUTION OF SPELLING

When a child is slow in learning to spell correctly do not blame the child; blame the forebears of the English speaking peoples and blame the modern scholars for being stubborn and dogmatic. No child could be as slow in grasping a spelling lesson as the advocates of simplified spelling have been in carrying their point.

At first English spelling was phonetic, just as the spelling of children is now. There were no "through," "drought," "debt," "programme," "enough," "campaign" and "gauge" in the language before William the Conqueror took a lot of Frenchmen into England with him, before Caxton and his press tampered with the written language and Dr. Johnson embalmed the whole foolishness in his dictionary.

English words should be spelled like the little girl spelled cantop: "canip." Nor should it have been necessary for Andrew Jackson to apologize for his mis-spelling by observing that he didn't think much of a man who could not spell a word in more ways than one.

Progress in the simplification of spelling has been discouragingly, almost exasperatingly, slow, but the revolution is inevitable. If the grammarians and pedagogues will not do it, the world will turn some way and demand that the simple be substituted for the silly.

A dark thinker in Europe has perfected a ray which paralyzes internal combustion engines. We believe our garage is full of these in February.

the people as the New Dealers proclaimed and Maine and Vermont instead of being an isolated pair of States, would have been just two in a most sizable group.

NO ONE really disputes that either. So clear was the Administration's obligation that when last year the anti-lynching bill, which, in one form or another, has been introduced at every session of Congress for a generation, was reintroduced with applied pressure from Negro leaders all over the country, the Administration, by which is meant Mr. Roosevelt, and the national party organization, by which is meant Mr. Farley, had to "come through," and they did. This bill, as Mr. Mark Sullivan wrote, was born in the conditions and spirit of many years ago, and was directed against what has come to be the rarest crime in the United States. Yet, though Mr. Roosevelt carefully avoided any public advocacy of the bill, he used his full weight in its behalf.

HIS LEADER, Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, who no one believed wanted the bill, was compelled to fight like a tiger for it. At least he seemed to. While the filibuster was at its height and feeling high, Walter White, the Negro lobbyist in charge of the bill, conferred with the President at the White House and was invited to Sunday afternoon tea by Mrs. Roosevelt. The chief political force back of the bill in the Senate was Senator Guffey, of Pennsylvania, who more successfully than any other Democrat has capitalized the Negro vote in his State and who certainly would not have been elected in 1934 if it had not been for that vote, which amounts to considerably more than 300,000. As a matter of fact, Mr. Guffey was the original inspiration of the Roosevelt effort to capture the Negroes.

IT WAS HE who induced Mr. Roosevelt in 1934 to appoint a Negro as Special Assistant Attorney General, without the consent of the Senate, and followed that up with a perfect deluge of Federal favors for the colored race such as they never received from Republicans in their palmy days. Upon the foundation laid by Mr. Guffey, Mr. Farley skillfully built, until the climax was reached in the 1936 campaign with a great Negro division of the National Committee, and literally hundreds of Negro teachers, preachers and professors, on regular salaries, traveling about the country with expenses paid, spreading the Roosevelt gospel. It was estimated that in the neighborhood of two million Negro votes for Mr. Roosevelt, which had previously been Republican, were garnered. Naturally, the Administration desire is to keep them and when the Negro leaders made a point of the anti-lynching bill, Administration leaders swung in behind it.

IT WAS DETERMINEDLY opposed by Southern Senators for three reasons—first, because it was a clearly-uncalled-for proposition, which would not diminish the crime at which it aimed; second, because it struck at the very roots of the State Rights doctrine, supposedly dear to the Democratic party and particularly dear to the South; third, because they knew that the passage of this bill inevitably would be followed by an effort to break down through Federal legislation the primary election laws in the Southern States by which the Negro vote is practically nullified.

THIS WAS ONE of those bills, like the court-packing bill and the recently enacted crop-control bill, which would not have gotten ten votes in the Senate on a secret ballot. Yet, it there had been an open roll call it would have gotten at least sixty. It was the sort of bill that made hypocrites and cowards of a good many Senators, and if there had been any real conviction behind it the filibuster would have failed. The test of sincerity came on the cloture votes, where the advocates of the bill could never muster a majority, much less the required two-thirds. Now the fight is over, the Administration politicians profess satisfaction. Some of them say it is an ideal result. They point out that they have satisfied the Negro leaders that they did all they could and yet have avoided the extreme resentment toward the Administration which would have resulted had the bill been jammed down the throats of the Southern Senators. The latter, of course, rejoice, but the fight has increased Southern hostility toward the Roosevelt regime and lessened the likelihood of Roosevelt-controlled States in the 1940 convention.

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

THE BRISTOL

A streamlined romantic theme blends with rippling comedy and lulling melody to make "The Life of the Party," one of the most scintillating musical comedy entertainments to come to the Bristol Theatre today.

Star-studded from the top of the cast to the bottom, the film has Joe Penney, Gene Raymond, Parkyakarkus, Victor Moore, Harriet Hilliard, Helen Broderick, Billy Gilbert, Ann Miller, Franklin Pangborn, Ann Shoemaker and Margaret Dumont in the principal roles.

As distinguished from many musical productions, the story predominates throughout, despite a sparkling variety of supplementary musical and dance features and comedy which kept the audience in a continual uproar during the initial showing of "The Life of the Party."

The story involves the romantic tribulations of a beautiful girl who, despite the efforts of an ambitious mother to bait a wealthy man with the girl's pulchritudinous charm, seeks a singing career.

Behind the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

Copyright, 1938

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD—Another singing surprise Zanuck has in store is to open the picture,

"Kentucky Moonshine," with Tony Martin, warbler of popular ballads, doing the "Prologue to Pagliacci." Martin has been in training for weeks under Jule Styne and Mark Markoff.

For purposes of realism, Twentieth Century-Fox also has Tyrone Power taking violin instructions for the film, "Alexander's Ragtime Band." His role is an orchestra leader who plays the instrument. Naturally, he can't master the violin, but will know something about it.

Power, incidentally, has finished his scenes in "Marie Antoinette" and is back on the home lot. Rumors of Janet Gaynor's collapse in Washington sent him rushing to the long distance phone. She said she simply got too tired after making seven appearances in one evening.

Though it has seemed like a dull month in Hollywood the score doesn't add up that way. Stan Laurel married Lilian in Yuma despite his ex-wife's attempt to block the ceremony. Lon Chaney, Jr., revealed he's been married since October to Patsy Beck, Tyler Brooke, who tried suicide Christmas, changed his mind and took a bride, Lucine Neil, studio secretary. Donald Novis, the singer, married Dorothy Bradshaw. Marjorie Weaver took a puzzling attitude about her reported wedding to Ensign Schaet of the navy. In the east, Betty Wyman, the model, went to the altar with Jack McGowan, the scenarist. And Mrs. Stokowski proved she can keep a secret even better than Garbo by marrying Russian Prince Alexis Zaisten-Zaistinsky.

Other weddings were forecast. Pinky Tomlin announced that the new object of his affections is Joanne Alcorn, who is half Indian. (Rudy Vallee's flame, Gloria Youngblood, also has Indian blood, so singers apparently prefer them.) Other couples announcing their engagement were: Lita Gray Chaplin and Arthur F. Davy, Edna Cantor and Jimmy McHugh, and Leona Middleton and Dick Purcell. Joan Fontaine and Conrad Nagel are coy about reports of theirs.

Death wiped the names of Myrtle Steadman, Robert McWade and Bill McNutt off the Hollywood slate. A baby daughter born to the Allan Jones (Irene Hervey) did something towards evening the score.

The celebs have had innings in the courts. Barbara Stanwyck and Frank Fay went to the mat over his right to see their adopted child. Mae West was sued twice, once for big sugar. Jack Hays dropped a $500,000 decision against the parents of Shirley Temple. Anita Louise's mother was sued for $150,000 by the ex-wife of her new groom. The courts refused to make M. G. M. pay the Earl of Warwick what he asked. Jimmie Crier, the orchestra leader, was tagged with a divorce suit.

In Hollywood only 48 hours taking violin instructions for the film, "Alexander's Ragtime Band." His role is an orchestra leader who plays the instrument. Naturally, he can't master the violin, but will know something about it.

Although he still maintains a staff of about 15 people at the studio, Chaplin hasn't been near the lot since a year ago last June. However, he has laid in a stock of sound cameras and, as far as technical requirements go, could start a picture on three weeks' notice.

Most naive young actor in Hollywood is Wayne Morris. For months he has been watching the list of stars and featured players posted in the Warner publicity office. The other day, his name appeared for the first time in the star group. He was so happy he took the girl who typed the list to the Brown Derby.

IN THE NEWS... On location for "Test Pilot," Clark Gable was dragged across a field when a gust of wind struck an open parachute. He got skinned hands and arms and lost a ring off his finger.

... Ouida Bergere is writing a screen story, the first since she married Basil Rathbone 11 years ago. ... Al Wertheimer has been moved to Palm Springs and will be up in a couple of months. ... In addition to the trailing vines, the "It" cafe says that souvenir hunters have stolen nine dozen napkins, 29 ash trays, three dozen liquor glasses, five table cloths and 998 wine lists. Until more can be printed, the maitre d'hotel and the captain have the only available lists.

"EXTRA FARE"

by Edna Robb Webster

CHAPTER XIII

Clarice stared helplessly, her mouth lax, face bewildered. "Why, Mr. Gaines—why—er—how-do-you-do!" Her hands fluttered aimlessly, as if she wanted them to help her and could think of nothing for them to do.

"My friend, Miss...?"
"Cole—Clarice Cole," she supplied nervously. It was easy enough to anticipate nonchalance in the presence of the great, but to achieve it! "Why, Mr. Gaines, it just doesn't seem possible—I—why, I went to see 'All For You' five times. I adored it! Really, I know most of the dialogue by heart!"

"Er—really?" His own voice faltered for an instant. Even the great have their awkward moments. "I'm flattered. Then you liked it?"

"It was marvelous! If I thought I ever could be a star in a picture like that—" her words were lost in the awe of her voice.

"You can be," Mervin Gaines declared. "If I can persuade you to consider—"

"Oh, Mr. Gaines," Clarice interrupted. "I shouldn't have let you think I had other offers in Hollywood. You see, I didn't know you were—you. I'm just taking a chance on going out there and breaking into pictures. That's the truth," she confessed guilelessly, all her sophistication dropped suddenly, as a statue is unveiled.

Gaines puckered his lips and whistled softly. "Pretty long chance—for most girls. But not for you. Anyway, I'm glad I saw you first. Doesn't that give me some advantage? Finders, keepers..." His smile was in his voice implied a not too-confident hope.

"Well," Clarice admitted candidly, "no use for me to pretend that I wouldn't consider any kind of a proposition to get a start. You know plenty about what a chance can mean to any girl who goes to Hollywood to break into the movie game. So do I. My meeting you on this train is a break-in ten thousand, Mr. Gaines, and if I've made a hit with you—" she spread her hands eloquently, conscious of their tapered slenderness and the gleaming nails that were red as rose petals.

"More than a hit!" His glance was amorous. "I don't know for whose sake I want you most—mine or my dear public's."

She dismissed that with practiced indifference. Clarice might be interested in a man if there were sufficient reason—that reason being for her own selfish end. She used her sex to get what she wanted from men, because she knew that it was her most effective weapon; but she never considered the possibility of giving them whatever they wanted in return.

She shifted her position and recrossed her legs, sheathed in gossamer-frail mesh stockings, noting with satisfaction that he did not miss the gesture. His eyes traveled over her frankly from head to heel—no pardonable glance of appraisal with commercialism only in mind. Clarice understood about that, also—even its two-fold significance. His inspection troubled her not at all. Her ambitious imagination leaped over these trivialities to that vision of her name in blinking, blazing lights—bright suddenly nearer, like a movie close-up speeding into the foreground in her face like a tangible thing.

"A career being my first ambition, even before I saw you, perhaps we had better keep them in order. I think I should try that out first," she suggested lightly.

"Of course. But that won't keep us from making these two long days less monotonous by eating acquainted as well as we can, will it?"

cigarette. There were several reasons for this gap in her experience: first, economy; second, no previous inclination; third, no urgent need. All three reasons had been swept aside by her meeting with Mervin Gaines. Also, she supposed that her chosen profession required the accomplishment. Never—having studied the graceful, languid gestures of Yola Renée performing the rite of smoking like a pagan priestess—would she admit her inexperience to Mervin Gaines.

She accepted a slender, gold-tipped tube from his onyx and silver a happy confusion which possessed her.

They lunched with gay festivity. The waiter recalled both their tips of the morning and hastened to select for them the center table for two, on the side. Jaxie took up the menu card as if it were another adventure.

"I wonder if there is anything astonishingly new on this list." "Something to write home about?" "Exactly. My Chicago public will want to know how I fared out here in the wilds. I'd like to surprise them."

"Okay," she laughed, rising quickly.

case, held it delicately to her lips in line with her lighter, inhaled. The smoke filled her mouth, her nose, eyes, lungs; it suffocated her for a frantic second. She turned aside and managed to cough without choking violently. As she reviewed the incident in her mind afterward she pronounced herself lucky. A break. Stupid of her not to have practiced before.

Gaines concealed his amusement at her bravado. She did not deceive him for a moment.

"Plucky kid." He approved her with satisfaction. "One of the do or die kind—but all for ambition. I think she'll fit in with my plans okay."

Jaxie and Kirby had returned to her section and worked for another hour, when the dining car porter came through with the first gong for lunch.

Kirby laid down his pen with a sigh that was half a yawn. "Whew! Is the morning gone already? I thought this would be a dragging day. But then, I expected to be glared at by old Mrs. Grouch instead of smiled upon by you. All the difference between night and day."

Jaxie added another smile for good measure. "I can't believe that I have my copy all done for the mail, but it is."

"Am I in it?"

She flushed deeply. "Consciously or unconsciously, you are. How could I leave you out, when you have been part of all my impressions from the moment we started?"

"Have I? You put everything into words so easily. What's that about my knowing the music but not the words, so you supply them, and together we make a song? Rather nice, making songs with you." His eyes caressed her with a gentle intentness.

"So long as we keep in harmony," she reminded him lightly, to conceal

"How about a calavo cocktail?" "Sounds interesting. Is it good?" "What's the difference?" he twinkled. "Tell your public it is, anyway. Everyone will rush to the fruit markets in Chicago to buy calavos, and the demand and the price will rise so rapidly that they will have to plant more calavo trees in California. Isn't that the idea? Publicity in disguise?"

"Something like that. Very well, a calavo cocktail for me."

He wrote two on the order card.

"What's the next inspiration?"

"Well, we can't step down from such grandeur as that to country sausage. Braised lamb chops and new peas," she decided, "and a nestle pudding for dessert. Iced coffee and corn muffins completes a lunch fit for a king."

"The King agrees. He will have the same as Her Majesty, the Queen."

The waiter rustled up with a flourish of ice bowl and tongs, spilled a little more water into each of their tumblers from the water bottle, checked Kirby's order with a practiced glance. Its generosity warranted more service, so he moved the salt and pepper shakers from the back to the center of the table, exchanged the positions of the sugar bowl and ash tray, rearranged the rows of silverware, and rustled back to the kitchen.

Kirby grinned delightedly. "We have him all encouraged."

"Here comes that queer old couple from our car," Jaxie murmured, looking toward the far end of the diner.

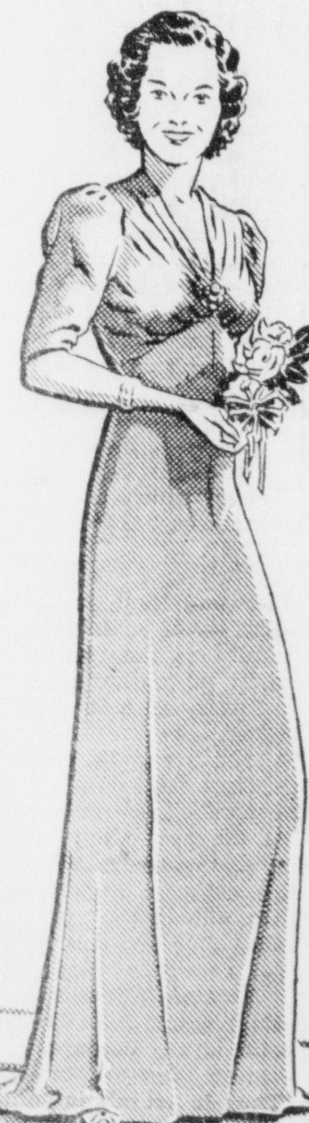

"Did you see him when she got on at Kansas City this morning, explaining everything to her? She's a sweet little old lady, but bright-eyed half to death. I'll bet it's her first time in a diner."

Judge Boyer To Speak At Scouting Council

Chairman Lloyd Weisel announced that Sellersville was planning an event during the Summer months. Following a discussion by Walter W. Pitzonka and Paul V. Forster it was decided to defer the 1938 Scouting Expositions until a later date. Greater interest is being shown in the First Aid Tournaments. Chairman Harold W. Thompson showed an increase of 40%. Eleven men are taking the American Red Cross first aid course at the Bristol Scouting University.

Hon. Hiram H. Keller reported as Advancement Chairman for the first Court of Honor period: 59 second class, 22 first class, 18 star scout, 7 Eagle Scouts, 235 merit badges, and 27 veterans. He spoke of the great enthusiasm at the recent Council Court of Honor in the Court House during National Anniversary Week. Spring Courts of Honor have been planned for June 5th—Central Division, Hartsville; June 12th, Northern Division, Dublin; June 19th, Catholic at St. Francis Industrial School, and Southern Division at the Emille Church with Bristol Troop No. 7.

Plans for the Doylestown Fair dramatizations were approved as presented by Dr. Strathie. They will be Tuesday afternoon, "First Aid," Tuesday evening, "Cub Circus," Wednesday afternoon, "Smoke Rescue," Thursday evening, "Tower Building," Friday evening, "Skills," Friday evening, "Wall Scaling," Saturday afternoon, "Tent Building," and Saturday evening, "Exhibit Cup Presentations."

The condition of the Council as indicated by the 1937 annual report to the National Headquarters was discussed by Scout Executive William F. Livermore. Growth in membership, the forward progress in trained leaders, holding older boys, great appeal of cubbing, good committee representation, and interesting activities were the accomplishments. One of the problems is the reaching of a greater number of the twelve-year-old boys.

1938 Objectives for the Council will be: continued interesting annual meetings, increasing the Executive Board to the maximum of thirty members, and a more adequate budget. Activities and camping: 50% of the dens, patrols and crews in the Standard events on Scouting Day; 50% of the patrols in the Camporee at Bowman's Hill; 80% of the troops at Buccoo Summer Camps, and an increase in hiking and camping. Advancement—every member advances one classification each year, and suitable recognition for den chiefs, leadership. Educational—more unit newspaper copy, continued improvement in public dramatizations, development of Council Scouting film, and 40% of the units on the budget plan.

Finance—the having of the foundations gifts solicitation before the general campaign. Health and safety—Unit meeting room inspections, more careful pre-Buccoo health inspections by local physicians, and contacts with units for better understanding of health and safety principles. Organization—added strength to present units through securing new man-power, monthly committee meetings, formal and informal visitations by Commissioners, and standardize Council Award system. Training—every man contacted on training values and opportunities, and 100% man effort for Scouting Conference and Buccoo Camps week-end.

TULLYTOWN

Mr. and Mrs. Rufus King will move from Edgely into their newly-purchased home within a few days.

Michael Andrews spent the week-end visiting relatives in Passaic, N. J. Emery Armington, Washington, D. C., has been spending a few days with relatives.

EDGELY

Thomas Dunbar, Connecticut, has been spending several days visiting relatives in Philadelphia, and also Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Dunbar, Edgely avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest McCavett, Washington, D. C., were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Hintz, Sr.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Stevens spent Sunday visiting Mrs. George Garrett, and Miss Florence Wright.

NEW PHONE TRANSMITTER

PHILADELPHIA (INS)—A telephone transmitter so delicate it can send the sound of a finger-snap 2,000 miles and back before the fingers are apart is being exhibited at Franklin Institute here. Dr. Owen Perrine, editor of the Bell System Journal, demonstrated the transmitter's power by sending 50 feet from it and snapping his fingers. The sound was relayed back perfectly.

BENSALEM SEXTET TIES SOUTHAMPTON GIRLS

(By Louis Tomlinson)

SOUTHAMPTON, Feb. 23.—In the wildest game ever staged between two girls' teams, Southampton and Bensalem sextets battled to a 15-15 draw in their league contest played here last night before an excited crowd. As a result of the game, neither team advanced or lost ground. Both have a league record of three victories and four defeats and a tie, in their eight games.

In the heat of the contest, Annetta Smith was fouled with only seconds to go. As a matter of fact, the game ended just after she was fouled. But with the one big opportunity in her life to become a heroine in the Merriwell role, she missed her shot after having to wait a minute or so for the crowd to quiet down. All this time added to her anxiety and as a result her attempt bounced off the side of the rim to the delight of Southampton's followers and to the despair of the Owl rooters who were among the congregation.

DYNAMITE JOE COX AND JOE DUSEK TO MEET

TRENTON, Feb. 23.—A torrid tussle is bound to ensue tonight at the Trenton Arena when Dynamite Joe Cox, Missouri Mauler, and Joe Dusek, youngest of the famed Nebraska grappling family, clash in the feature attraction on Johnny Ipp's weekly wrestling card.

Their match will be a best two fall out of three, 90 minute limit affair and with two "killers" of nationwide fame like Dusek and Cox being embroiled it is sure to be a hectic set.

Joe Dusek has not appeared at the Arena this season, but fans who saw him in action last year know that he has displaced Rudy and Wally as runners-up to Ernie as a mat villain. Mat experts state that he is ready to displace Ernie as the captain of the Riot Squad, as the Duseks are known. There is no doubt that Joe is facing a tartar in Cox, one of the mightiest grapplers in the game.

Cox has compiled an enviable record on the local canvas. He holds a win over Chief Little Wolf and this season, in three appearances, downed Rebel Rob Russell, pinned Jack Donovan and fought a rousing draw with Cliff Olson. Cox has never appeared in a dull bout and while his tactics may not meet with the approval of the fans, they applaud his fast and dynamic action.

An exceptionally fine supporting card will precede the Cox-Dusek duel. Mike Mazurki, Manhattan College giant, meets the huge Floyd Marshall, in the semi-windup. Jack League, classy newcomer who downed George Koverly last week, faces rowdy Joe Maynard and Ralph Garibaldi meets an old favorite, Andy Rascher. Ladies will be admitted free to the ringside accompanied by a male escort. The first bout will start at 8:30 p. m.

Socking the Sports Scribes

(By BURNLEY)

Newest of current pastimes to become popular is the gentle art of knocking sports writers.

Bill Terry, an old hand at the game, started the ball rolling recently by writing (with the aid of a ghost) a magazine article denouncing Sunday baseball writers. Then that irrepressible pop-off, Dizzy Dean, chimed in with an interview in which he rapped the scribes unmercifully and opined that ball players should never talk to baseball writers. Diz, you may recall, expressed his appreciation for the publicity that made him famous by taking a punch at a sports writer last spring.

To top it all, one of the pseudo intellectual mags has lately published a piece entitled "Sports Writers Are Always Wrong." This diatribe is a masterpiece of invective directed against the profession of sports scribbling, the general gist being that sports writers are nothing but hypocritical press agents who never tell the truth.

The scribblers of sport, who are used to tossing verbal brickbats, seem to be getting a liberal dose of their own medicine of late.

BILL TERRY PICKS GIANTS TO WIN AGAIN

(Note: Herewith is the first of a series of articles by International News Service staff correspondents, previewing what the major league clubs probably will do in the 1938 pennant races. Today, the Giants.)

(By Pat Robinson
(I. N. S. Sports Writer))

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—(INS)—Bill Terry already has picked his Giants to win another National League pennant.

Should Terry's forecast come true, it will be a sad commentary on the strength of the National League, for Terry—who has no illusions about his own team or any other—must realize his team would be lucky to finish in the first division if they were in the American League.

Terry is going to stand pat on the team that won for him. Therefore, in predicting the Giants will repeat, he must believe the Cubs, Cardinals and Pirates have added no strength, for if they had, any one of them might come down in front.

Let's give the Giants the once over. In the outfield we find Joe Moore, Hank Leiber and Jim Rippel. Moore and Rippel can be depended on to field well and hit over .300 but Leiber still is a big question mark.

Terry has said repeatedly that he hopes to go to town behind Leiber but so far the big blond has been only a promise and rarely a threat. If Leiber lived up to Terry's expectations, he could easily add 25 per cent to the Giants' punch. If he fails, the Giants may fall with him, for they have only Wally Berger for a replacement and he's been washed up for some time.

There is nothing the matter with the infield. McCarthy, Whitehead, Bartell and Ott can give a pretty fair imitation of a stone wall. Bartell and Whitehead should do as well as last year when they hit, respectively, .306 and .285, and Ott should enhance his .294 which is far below his normal speed. McCarthy hit .275 which is practically nothing for a first baseman but he may improve a little on that.

Terry made a ten-strike when he shifted Ott to third base where he quickly proved himself the top man in the league. He should be better than ever this time.

Danning has supplanted Mancuso behind the plate, and catching every day, may add some power to the offense. How well he will handle the pitchers over a season's play remains to be seen, but rating him off past performances, he should do all right.

CASTOR TO BOX IN PHILA. AT CAMBRIA A. C.

(By Louis Tomlinson)

SOUTHAMPTON, Feb. 23.—Coach Claude Lodge's Southampton Greyhounds spent an enjoyable evening at home on Washington's Birthday, last night, indulging in the pastime of clipping the wings of the Bensalem Owls to the tune of 27-18. They performed this feat before a wild and enthusiastic crowd that wandered in upon the entertainment, and as a result of their victory, the Hounds stepped up into fourth place tie with the Owls in the Lower Bucks County basketball race. The final tabulation of the exercises was 27-18.

Unless Terry makes a late trade for Schumacher, the starting pitchers will be Schumacher, Melton, Hubbell and Gumbert. Castleman underwent a spinal operation and won't be ready until June, if then.

Hubbell must repeat or the Giants are sunk. For the sake of argument, let's concede him another 22 victories and Melton the 29 he had last year. But Schumacher and Gumbert, off their work last season, hardly figure as pennant winning pitchers.

Behind these we have Baker, who should one day be a great pitcher; Lohman and Vandenberg, both up from Baltimore. One of these may be ready to make the grade.

All this indicates the Giants offer several question marks. Will Ott, Leiber, McCarthy and Danning improve their hitting? Can Hubbell come through again? Can Castleman come back? Will one of the rookie pitchers come through?

If they can, Terry's forecast may come true. The writer hesitates to disagree with the omniscient Mr. Terry but he does not believe the Giants can repeat.

Messenger Leads Police To Capture of Bandit Gang

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—(INS)—A one-man posse, mounted on a Western Union bicycle, was the hero of all Brooklyn today.

The youthful messenger hero, Robert Botcher, 22, led police in a dramatic capture of two suspected members of Brooklyn's traffic light robbers, a band that has robbed numerous motorists lately.

When the machine of John Gallagher, 37, paused for a traffic light, three thugs climbed into the car and felled Gallagher, then fled as Botcher pursued them on his bike. Suddenly they stopped and threatened to shoot the youth unless he turned back. Botcher turned back, but only to summon police who captured two of the men.

The prisoners said they were Patsy Caputo, 26, and Leonard Pasquale, 25.

TUNNEY WINS BATTLE IN BUSINESS WORLD, TOO

Mrs. Tunney . . . mother of three sons

Gene Tunney today

The fighting marine

The "long count"

(By WALTER SEIFERT)

International Illustrated News Writer
NEW YORK.—James Joseph Tunney, nicknamed Gene, is starting in the business ring where dozens of ex-fighters have been knocked out.

The once great pugilist, perhaps the most misunderstood champion of all time, has added chairmanship of a large national distilling corporation to his impressive list of business connections.

Warning liquor manufacturers against "irresponsible advertising" of whiskey and its sale to minors, he is proving an executive of far-seeing discretion.

Tunney's career, which began in Greenwich Village, New York, where he was born in 1898, has a definite Frank Merriwell flavor. Since his first boxing exhibition at a Knights of Columbus show in 1914, he has won the world's heavyweight crown, become a millionaire, married an heiress, and written a credible autobiography.

After leaving St. Veronica's parochial school for a job with a steamship company, he joined the U. S. marines and served in France during the World war. In 1919 he won the light-heavyweight championship of the A. E. F.

Returning to the United States after the armistice, he won the American light-heavy title and stepped into the heavyweight ranks. A cool, accurate ring general, he became known as a boxer rather than a slugger.

Beat Dempsey
After many ring skirmishes, Tunney took the world's heavyweight championship by beating Jack Dempsey, public idol number one, in 1926. The following year, at Chicago, he boxed his way to another victory over Dempsey's dynamite fists in the famous "Battle of the Long Count."

Shortly before he retired from the ring in 1928, after pounding Anzac Tom Heeney to a bloody pulp, Gene started to study Shakespeare and other classic authors.

This intellectual excursion, undertaken quite sincerely, won for him the enmity of many fight fans who accused him of being priggish.

Priggish or not, the astute Tunney had made more than $2,000,000 in fights and films, and reached retirement with few of the physical stigmata characteristic of battered pugs.

In 1928 he married Mary Josephine "Polly" Lauder, grand niece of Andrew Carnegie and heiress to millions. They have three sons.

During recent years the former champ has continued his literary activities, written for the Encyclopedia Britannica, and taken the stump for President Roosevelt.

Among his closest friends are Commander Richard Evelyn Byrd, John McCormack and George Bernard Shaw. The British playwright professes to see in him some approach to the superman, whom Shaw defines as, "a kind of good-looking philosopher-athlete."
